CANADIAN FEMINISM AND THE LAW

The Women's Legal Education and Action Fund and the Pursuit of Equality

by SHERENE RAZACK, PH.D.

Systems of laws and statutes often act against the best interests of women and minorities. No organization has been more active or successful in fighting the inequalities and abuses of the law than the Legal Education and Action Fund (LEAF), a feminist advocacy group established to bring forward cases under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In a penetrating analysis of women's rights before the law, Razack considers the history of LEAF and its work. She begins by exploring the language of rights in liberal theory and the impact of postmodernist thought on our understanding of the issue. Razack then considers the role of women in the legal system, and how the law fails to address adequately the situation of women.

Razack continues by charting the course of LEAF litigation. She reviews the cases on which the organization has focussed, the legal issues involved, and the feminist principles which come into play. In total, she has compiled a compelling case study of legal advocacy with implications for all those struggling to create a more equitable body of law.

"There is no other study in which a specific group has received such a careful, well-researched analysis. Feminism and the Law is positively path-breaking and will certainly form a reference point for all subsequent scholars of feminism in Canada. It is an important contribution to both an understanding of rights discourse and the feminist movement in Canada."

Marjorie Cohen, Associate Professor, Sociology, O.I.S.E.

The Author: Sherene Razack teaches Women's Studies at the Simone de Beauvoir Institute of Concoria University. In the fall of 1991 she will be in the Department of Adult Education, Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.
